Language is a sacred and precious gift, it is a magical gloss that forms the human being, takes it to the stages of development, initiates spiritual improvement, and opens the gates of the thought gulshan. Respect and attention to the language is recognition of the dignity of the human child in the world. It is not for nothing that our people always looked at the language, especially their mother tongue with love, respected it, and were proud of the perfection and unique tones of the Uzbek language.

To imagine the wealth of our Uzbek language as a whole, it is enough to take a look at the treasure of Alisher Navoi's works. You dive into the world of endless thoughts and feelings. It is impossible to be without this treasure. Alisher Navoi devoted his whole life and work to the development of the Uzbek language. He wrote a special work "Mukhakamat ul-lughatiyn" about the vocabulary of the mother tongue, which was called "Turkish language" at the time, and its suitability for artistic creation. He created unique works in all genres and types of Eastern classical literature. He wrote the first "Khamsa" and the first "Majolis un-nafais" in this language. He introduced innovations to existing literary traditions. The great poet and statesman Navoi always focused on the fact that language is an important tool in the development of people's culture, enlightenment and spirituality, and that language is a symbol connecting the human race with the past and the present.

Indeed, the fact that the Uzbek language, which has the status of the state language today, has become one of the sacred symbols protected by law, standing alongside the flag, coat of arms, anthem, and Constitution of our independent state, is a feeling of pride in the hearts of every contemporary. wakes him up.

It is a very honorable thing to learn our state language perfectly, to work without errors with business documents in the state language, and to develop feelings of respect for our national traditions.

Uzbek language and literature are the face of our nation, the root of our spirituality.

In the course of the lesson, the main issue is to help students concentrate, write without mistakes, teach them to believe in themselves and think independently. Therefore, it is necessary to try to make students speak more, think more, improve their written literacy and make them feel the taste of discovery. During the school year, it is necessary to accustom students to work with the spelling dictionary and to use folk art effectively.

The use of interesting methods that encourage you to read the works presented in the form of fragments in the textbook will have a good effect on the thorough study of our Uzbek language and on improving written literacy. Students who read a lot have a higher level of independent thinking and written literacy.

During the period of the Mustabid regime, our national Uzbek language, like many of our traditions and customs, was subjected to many restrictions and discrimination. Losing the national language means losing the nation's spirit, identity, and nationality.

Thank God, those dark days are in the past. Today, our Uzbek language sat on its ancient Turkish throne. How much effort did it take to get to this point? From the Constitution of our country to administrative documents, it is created in one language, that is, in Uzbek. The state language is a mirror of the nation's will, mood, knowledge, level, and political rights. Today, a new generation, a new layer has appeared. Now, it has become the demand of the time to communicate in literary language while preserving the purity of our mother tongue.

Now the Uzbek language has its place, prestige and status among the developed languages of the world. At the same time, there is a legitimate question that should make each of us think about the extent to which we are able to show the potential of our mother tongue today.

We need to introduce our students to the layers of our language, teach them more about the rare works of our spiritual treasure. As the Uzbek language is the power of our nation, the mirror of our national development, it is our duty to protect this priceless wealth. Each state ensures the purity and enrichment of its official language and cares for the expansion of its scope of use. Our country has created favorable conditions for language learning and teaching. Wide opportunities have been opened for the rise of the status of our mother tongue, development and further improvement. Nowadays, our language is developing more and more attention is being paid to it. Rare works, textbooks, multi-volume national encyclopedias of the Uzbek State published in the press, radio and television, national publishing houses of Uzbekistan are a clear proof of this. The logic, meaning and wit of the wisdom and sayings of our great-grandfathers about the Uzbek language are our inexhaustible spiritual wealth.

The Uzbek language is the source of education. It is necessary to convey to students the place of the Uzbek language and the services of our great ancestors who introduced our people to the world in educating young people to be perfect people.

The most important task for young people and teachers is to study science diligently in order to love and honor this dear Motherland and become worthy children of this country.
