ABSTRACT

This article discusses important factors in learning languages. In today's non-stop developing world, a great deal of attention is being paid on learning languages.

Keywords: English environment, method of language learning, community centers, imitate other languages, building vocabulary, native speakers, foreign countries, successful learners.

INTRODUCTION

Today, the demand and interest in learning foreign languages, especially English, has increased so much that children from kindergarten to senior professionals are trying to learn English. This is definitely a positive situation, because language learning along with studying the culture, history and customs of the countries that speak that language, it also opens doors for personal interests.

Making learning interesting

First of all, the amount of time the learner spends daily on language learning based on the age, interest and consistency of the learner, if the English environment is important, the quality of the textbook used, a skilled and knowledgeable teacher, and the right approach to language learning. Sometimes, students attribute their difficulties in learning a language to the fact that they are not in foreign countries where the language is spoken or that they do not have friends who speak English. As a matter of fact, I think that such things are inappropriate in the current technology and Internet development era the method of language learning can be explained as follows: a child cannot speak until he is approximately 2-2.5 years old; during this time he accumulates vocabulary. However, the child is not taught grammar and is not reprimanded for his mistakes. He only learns his mother tongue by listening to others around him and repeating or applying what he hears. Likewise similarly, adults increase their vocabulary and begin to speak by repeating what they hear. Most importantly, they do not take as long to speak as children, because they have language learning skills and learning other languages becomes easier. We can communicate very well even if we do not know many words in our language.

The most effective way to achieve the goal is for a person who aims to learn English to create an English environment for himself, that is, too constantly listen, read, write and speak English. Many people think that if they go to special language courses, I will definitely learn a foreign language." Rather, they think that foreign language courses are responsible for achieving their goals. This is completely wrong. Remember, you are always responsible for yourself, the teacher can teach, but 99% of the lesson depends on you and 1% on the teacher. In fact, there are many factors that are important in learning a foreign language. If you expect a teacher to teach you how to speak a language fluently, then you are very mistaken. If you think that by studying grammar rules you will learn to speak fluently, you are mistaken. If you think that you have to live in a country where they speak this language in order to speak this language yourself, then you are again mistaken. You do not have to go to school. You do not need to take the course. All you have to do is decide that you are going to take charge, become responsible for your own language learning.

Important keys of learning foreign language

Firstly, a person must want to learn the language. This seems strange: everyone who learns a language obviously wants to learn it. Most people who take language courses at school, university or community centers do not actually want to learn a language. It is not that important to them. They are not willing to put in enough effort needed to improve. You have to want it, you have to be determined to learn the language.

Secondly, we must believe that we can learn the language. A high percentage of people learning languages do not believe they can achieve results. It is difficult for them to imagine themselves as someone who speaks another language well. Most people give up on this activity. They resist language. They ask questions: why in this language should it be said this way and not another? They struggle with the tongue. This does not lead to success. We must have an attitude that says we love the language. We do not question the language. We just want to learn it. Another thing is the willingness to accept mistakes. We will make mistakes. We are going to make a lot of mistakes, mistakes are good, because through mistakes we begin to notice where there are problems.

Another aspect of the successful learner's attitude is the willingness to imagine oneself as a member of another language group. In other words, you need to imitate other languages, imitate the behavior of people of another language group. Unfortunately, most students resist this. They feel more comfortable in the patterns of their native language, try to use pronunciation as in their native language, rely on the spelling of their native language rather than on the pronunciation and grammar of the language they are learning. So, I think the crux of the issue is attitude.

These things are the most important keys to learning English than talent or so-called ability, than what kind of teacher, school or course you find, or whether you go to another country. Nobody will suddenly solve your problem. The number one question is your attitude. The next most important issue when it comes to learning a language is time. Nowadays, a lot of people say: "I don't have time", but I don't believe them, because there are many ways to interact with language, we can find time to do the things that we like to do. But other people love songs. Some people like to watch movies. Some people like to talk right away. I prefer to spend time - six months, a year, more - just listening, reading, building my vocabulary. I would say, sitting in a classroom where we spend most of our time listening to other students who are not native speakers, we are not in intense interaction with the language, especially if all our fellow students are from the same language group. In addition, there is a high probability that students reinforce each other's mistakes.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, it is worth saying that whether a person is young or old, whether he devotes himself to science and world knowledge, his heart is certainly filled with intelligence. And the shortcomings of a person gradually it disappears, it moves forward towards the height. "When people stop reading, they also stop thinking as they stopped." So, science is very important for us to become human and remain human. When learning a new language is viewed as a hobby rather than a chore, it becomes easier to learn it. It often depends on the learner how to adapt to the process or create an interesting environment. Discipline, responsibility and patience and it is the foundation of any achievement.
